App. 199 (1999), which is a w standard, the privilege waiver analysis is

- 1. The Court erroneously believed that Ohio was asserting an "advice of counsel" defense to Ten Talents' bad faith claims; and
- 2. Under Cedell v Farmers, 295 P.3d 239 (Wash. 2013), the presumption that there is no attorney-client privilege in first party bad faith litigation can be overcome by a showing that the attorney was not engaged in the claim investigation, but was instead providing only a legal opinion about whether coverage exists under the law. This determination is made by the Court following an in camera review of the disputed documents.

The Court has conducted an in camera review and is satisfied that Mr. McAllister did not participate in the investigation and instead provided advice only on the subject of whether coverage existed on a given set of facts.

The Court has now received Ten Talents' Response to the Motion. Ten Talents argues that the Cedell inquiry is not yet complete: it claims that if and to the extent McAllister engaged in quasi-fiduciary functions the privilege is waived. It claims that by participating in correspondence with the insured's attorney and Ohio's claims adjustor regarding the efficient proximate cause of the loss, McAllister did engage in such functions, and argues that the privilege is waived. Ten Talents also argues that while Ohio's defense is not denominated "advice of counsel," Ohio nevertheless claims that its conduct was reasonable. Ten Talents argues that that assertion puts the advice of Ohio's counsel in play.

Ten Talents claims (and has demonstrated) that McAllister played some role in Ohio's failure to respond to or explain the inapplicability of Ten Talents' efficient proximate cause theory. It claims further that the privilege is waived in any event, under the last step of the Cedell analysis: it asks the Court to find that there is a foundation to permit a claim of bad faith to proceed.

1 Ten Talents claims that it has made a showing sufficient to permit its bad faith claim to proceed. It claims that (with McAllister's blessing) Ohio denied Ten Talents' claim without doing a reasonable investigation, and it failed to respond to its insured's lawyer's letter making a claim under the efficient proximate cause rule. Ten Talents demonstrates that its letter was sent to McAllister and that he was asked to approve Ms. Labrot's response to it—the response that did not address the efficient proximate cause rule. Ohio argues that its attorney did far less in the way of investigation than did the attorney at issue in Cedell. It argues that there is nothing in the record to suggest that Ohio's attorney provided any assistance in this claim other than legal opinions regarding the existence of coverage. The Court will not reconsider its Order granting the Motion to compel. First, Ten Talents is correct that it has made the requisite showing that here is a foundation for a bad faith claim to proceed by showing the series of letters involving the efficient proximate cause claim and response. Second, while Ohio's defense does not expressly rely on "advice of counsel," Ohio's claim that its conduct was reasonable necessarily implicates that advice. It does not appear to this Court that the new Cedell standard is a particularly difficult one for an insured to meet. The Court will not award fees against Ohio for forcing a Motion to Compel in the face of these new standards. Its position was substantially justified. // // // // //
